

REFUGEES IN ROSSENDALE

What is a refugee?

A refugee is someone who has been forced to flee their country because of persecution, war or violence. Those recognised as refugees are accepted to have a well-founded fear of persecution because of their race, religion, nationality, political opinion or membership in a particular social group. Most cannot return home or are afraid to do so¹.

What is an asylum seeker?

When someone applies for asylum in the UK, they are asking the UK to recognise that they are a refugee. While they are waiting for a decision, people are often referred to as 'asylum seekers' rather than refugees. A majority are eventually recognised to be refugees.

In the year to December 2025, for 42% of people applying for asylum, the Home Office's initial decision was that they are genuine refugees². Most of those refused asylum appeal for their case to be reconsidered by a Court. In 2025, 40% of those who appealed were recognised as refugees or needing protection. Of those whose appeal is unsuccessful ('failed asylum seekers'), many go on to find further evidence to support their case and are eventually granted refugee status, or another form of protection. Thus over two thirds of asylum seekers are eventually recognised as refugees.

Can you be a refugee without first being an asylum seeker?

Some refugees have come to the UK through schemes that meant they did not have to apply for asylum. There have been schemes for Syrians, Ukrainians and Afghans. However in 2025 fewer than 2000 people came to the UK through resettlement schemes.

Until autumn 2025, individuals granted refugee status had the right to bring immediate family dependents to join them in the UK, through refugee family reunion. 90% of those who came to the UK this way were women and children. The refugee family reunion route is currently closed. Very few refugees are now able to come to the UK without applying for asylum.

How does the UK compare with other European countries?

The UK receives fewer asylum applications per head of population than most other European countries. It ranks 15 out of 27.

Homes for Ukraine scheme, and 26 who came through Afghan resettlement schemes. There are no statistics collected about the total numbers of refugees in Rossendale (or any other area).

When people are still waiting for a decision about their application for asylum and living in asylum accommodation, they have no choice about where they live. People granted refugee status are free to live where they wish and many move away to areas where they have better connections or hope for more chance of finding work. There are no figures for how many stay in the area and how many move away.

What do we know about the refugees living in Rossendale?

We have some idea about this through information from the people attending Rossendale Refugee Support Group (RRSG):

- Since the group started in July 2022 over 650 individuals have used RRSG.
- Many people come as a family group (about 70 families have registered with our group). But most people who use the group are single, and most are men. Many of the single people have families back home.
- About three quarters registering are people seeking asylum. A majority of these are subsequently granted refugee status)
- People come from many different countries. The most common countries of origin among people who have registered in the last 12 months are: Afghanistan, Eritrea, Sudan, Iran, Pakistan, Iraq, Yemen, Syria and Somalia.
- People come from a wide range of backgrounds, for example teachers, engineers, subsistence farmers, doctors, students. Some have had to leave comfortable homes and lifestyles.

What is life like for asylum seekers in Rossendale?

Those who are destitute are provided with 'asylum support' – this includes basic housing, typically a room in a shared house, and £49.18 a week to cover all expenses (food, transport, clothes, phone etc). They have no choice about where they live. The housing is usually in low cost housing in less popular areas.

Many people comment that people in Rossendale are friendly. Some have said that they don't find as much racism here as in other places, but recently more people are experiencing hate incidents.

Life as an asylum seeker can be difficult:

- Most are separated from their family and friends.
- Many are very worried about family back home, some of whom will be living in dangerous situations
- Many are very isolated. Many have limited English. Some have no regular face to face contact with anyone who speaks the same language.
- None know how long they will have to wait for a decision on their asylum claim. Recently claims are being processed more quickly than last year, but over 20% wait more than a year.
- Although people are entitled to a solicitor to assist them with their asylum claim, there are very few solicitors available and most people who have come to Rossendale recently can't get one.

- For everyone waiting for a decision on their asylum claim, the future is uncertain. They do not know if they have a future in the UK, and they can at any time be detained and held in immigration detention for an indefinite period.
- Most are not permitted to do any paid work, even if they are highly educated and skilled.
- The majority have lived through traumatic experiences. Well over half are estimated to have been subject to human rights abuses in their home country or on their journey. Most people who have arrived in the last year or two have arrived by boat.
- Many are regularly stressed by UK news that makes them fear they will be sent home.
- News from home can also be stressful, especially for those with families in dangerous situations.
- Most people find £49.18 a week very hard to live on, and many struggle to afford enough food, or to pay for the data they need to speak to family and friends.

Those whose asylum claims are refused

Those whose claims are refused, and who do not manage to appeal successfully, have to leave their accommodation usually within 21 days. They are offered help to return back to their own country but for those who have fled out of fear, this is rarely an option. Unless there is a clear reason why they cannot return, they are not entitled to any housing or financial support in the UK, and can easily find themselves street homeless.

Those recognised as refugees

Those recognised as refugees receive the same rights to work, study, benefits, and housing as British people. Healthy single people usually have 28 days to leave their asylum accommodation and find somewhere else to live. Families with children, and people with severe health problems are given emergency accommodation, but this is usually outside Rossendale, in a hotel or hostel. Children then usually have to leave their school abruptly and may then be out of school for months. Because of the general shortage of accommodation in the UK, those not entitled to emergency accommodation often end up homeless.

Those who have a spouse or children outside the UK currently cannot apply for their family to come to the UK on a 'family reunion' visa. This possibility is expected to be re-opened in future, but with new conditions, that will make it unattainable for many.
